The Dead lie here—the Dead who once were young. Laughing and blithe and wholly unafraid; Into each fight their reckless strength they flung And won a glory that shall never fade. They gave their lives to make a nation live.

And so above their graves we bend today

To give the praise our hearts are glad to give Knowing our debt is more than we can pay The Dead lie here—the Dead who fought and fell
On many fields, and freely gave their youth
That those who should come after them might dwell

Within a land of justice, right, and truth, They fought to make men free, to make a world Where hope might flourish and where love might grow, And, dreaming thus, into the fight they hurled Their strength, their faith, their splendid youth aglow,

The Dead lie here; the flag above them waves And with uncovered heads we humbly stand And lay our flowered tributes on their graves Who died because they loved this goodly land work is finished and their task is through Upon our shoulders is their burden laid

To carry on with faith and purpose true
The cause they died for—valiant, unafraid. (Copyright, 1922, NEA Service)
